TODAY'S PRESENTATION:

Donald Derozier
Publish Your Book Now

Today's Presentation

Today's presentation is by author, Donald Derozier.

It has been said that everyone has a book within themselves, a story to share, a tale to tell. But publishing in today's world can seem overwhelming.

Many potential authors are frightened by the daunting task of writing, submitting, and facing those dreaded rejections everyone fears. Thus, they leave this earth without sharing what was dear to them. So there is a void unfilled in the cultural legacy.

Thank you Donald!

Just a reminder ...

Thanks to a recent – unannounced – upgrade of the commercial Web hosting platform that we use, our Web site went down last week, as certain components of its (now older) software are not compatible with the host's upgrade.

The site that has gone down is/was our 3rd generation site (I launched our first way back in 2001), and the high-level design of generation 4 has already been under-way, but now has to accelerate in order to get us fully back online, and with a new look at the same time.

In the short term, I'm amidst installing and custom-programming new software that will allow me to bring most of the "brochure" portions of our site back online so that the public can be aware of our work. Interactive things like the member database won't be available during this time. Once that interim step is complete, the process to modernize our site's look will get underway, in addition to incorporating the latest technology for member management and other interactive features.

I don't have a time estimate for the final 4th generation yet, but it is a big job. I'll let you know more when I can estimate better. I expect the interim site to be up by the time we meet this Wednesday.

Roosevelt PAL

Our PAL Roosevelt Elementary will be heading back to school very soon which means we will be beginning our 27th (or so) year partnering with them. That being said they will be looking for a few volunteers with either short or long term opportunities. Some of the volunteer opportunities right now are:

- Working with students in individual class rooms, usually reading, writing or math (weekly commitment).
- Early morning reading – reading to students during the breakfast program 7:15am-7:35am (any day of the week that works for you).
- Monthly lunch and learn with the 5th graders - volunteers can speak to their vocation, hobby or interest to the kids during their lunch hour.
- Mentor a student- if you have the time to meet once a week during an allotted time to get to know a student and help them navigate day to day life .
- Help coordinate the before school interest group. (Talk to Marcus for more information on this opportunity.)

A few other volunteering chances will come up during the school year which will be announced at our weekly meetings.

For more information, contact Marcus Butts or Kari Seefeldt.
